

recognize the potential rebuttal here!
Our desire to obtain material rewards could make us resort to cunning ways, esp when the "cat" is away human are materialistic, we will do anything in order to obtain the material rewards we crave for. This makes it possible to reward people for being obedient. Thus, in order to ensure obedience, rewards are given to encourage them. For example, in a firm, employees usually receive their work bonuses at the end of a year to reward their hardwork. The harder you work, the more bonus you will get. Thus, this bonus serves as an incentive to ensure employees to stay productive instead of skiving. Therefore, by means of rewards, it is effective in ensuring obedience.

Performance Bonus

In view of the above argument, it is too parochial to say that strict supervision is the best way to ensure obedience. After all, if the cat keeps watching the mouse hole, the mouse will eventually find an opportunity to sneak out. Thus, other than strict supervision inculcating the right values from young and rewarding are also effective.

logic!

Cogently argued with good e.g.!
Well-structured!

Comment perhaps on the tedious & futility of this,

Chinese proverb

C - 19/30
L - 14/20
33/50

