

Nonviolence in the mainstream: The daily practice of peace

Residential Retreat

As individuals on a journey towards a sustainable practice of peace and nonviolence, we are seeking wholeness. We need to know who we are and how the dominant culture into which we were born shapes and conditions us. Sustainable spiritual growth requires the integration of the inner and outer journeys. Throughout the week, our conversation will move between the inner and outer concerns around developing a nonviolent foundation for living.

The overall context of the work is the Christ story. The facilitators work intentionally in an experiential, post-denominational (non-dogmatic) way and draw on a wide variety of resources, metaphors and stories.

We welcome and include people of any age, occupation, faith-community or none. Living nonviolently is supported by a living faith in the divine, and a belief that a sacred presence resides in the hearts of all people.

The Rhythm of our Time

We will gather on Sunday evening to settle into our surroundings, greet each other, share the evening meal, and begin our journey together.

The daily rhythm will include time for: prayer, worship, meditation, journaling, artistic creation, silence, small and large group sharing and input presentations. Ample free time is built into the rhythm of our days.

Four core themes, around which the process of the retreat will flow, are:

- Knowing myself and my place in the cosmos
- Dominant cultural myths outer and inner
- Jesus and a strategic nonviolent alternative
- Skills for nonviolent living

Nonviolence in the mainstream: The daily practice of peace

The more we are equipped with the vision and skills of nonviolence, the more capacity we have to sustain a commitment to the daily practice of peace in our lives.

Every day people face the challenge and consequences of violence and injustice. Some people confront violence with violence. Others remain passive. Neither approach is sustainable.

Each often fails to address the root causes of violence or stop the cycle of destruction, resentment, and retaliation that violence and injustice create.

An alternative approach is active nonviolence, a creative and active power for justice that uses neither violence nor passivity.

People use nonviolence to challenge personal, interpersonal, and social patterns of violence. Creating a nonviolent world for ourselves, for our families and for our communities challenges each of us to become purposeful leaders with clear intentions.

A leader is someone with the power to project either shadow or light onto some part of the world and onto the lives of the people who dwell there...

a good leader is intensely aware of the interplay of inner shadow and light, lest the act of leadership do more harm than good

(Palmer, P. 2000, The Courage To Teach, pg 79)

The ongoing journey inward nurtures and sustains our growth in active non-violence and thereby enables a more powerful engagement in the transformation of the world around us.

On this retreat we intend to create space for anyone who is passionate about nonviolence regardless of background, beliefs or current skill level.
