

APPRAISING THE ISSUES--

Faith in Today's Politics

December 2007

Instead of confessing their credibility cannot represent their false advertising of 'family values' and religiosity, human rights and regard for public safety and that of other international citizens; Romney has to stomp on a lesser yet still contemptuously selfish distinction between public service and what his faith would prefer—that being ethnocentric, pig headed delusional self righteousness, (we'd have to guess really). The constitution they say, imposes a burden of caring for others outside their faith, whom otherwise they shouldn't regard because other people's religions are all false under their begrudging, moronic claptrap, which is really an earnest devotion to obedience having no time to expound on theosophy (that's the best I can do for him). It isn't in keeping with Mormon dogma to respect the framer's documents or intentions, never was—because they are stranded on a post medieval messianic ego trip of patriarchal oppression and domination (fluoro-sacraments, 8-glasses a day, never mind the autism epidemic; excommunication papers will be reversed in counter suit). They are secretly a cult of monarchio-fascists who dabble in a catalog of satanic symbolisms and rituals cherished and held more sacrosanct among their power-wealth elite than the pabulum they doll out to their membership. No house wine for their rabble, Dracula's castle is festooned with the brooding on pagan antimatter, as any tourist in Salt Lake could look up and tell. "Where's the brothel?"

It's a simple matter of seeing the world and adult responsibility through the same intellectually stunted high school football from little league delayed-cognitive allegiances. They have to confine faith to the huddle with their team, like an eight year old. Then for a report any political candidate is supposed to turn in as an assignment, that eight year old writes about how the president cannot mistake his public service duty to slacken for all peoples for when his faith would have him err on the side of the more natural and agreeable propensity for inhumanity, tunnel vision, and racist, xenophobic bigotry. D-, not statesmen material? Please, they are all handled props of bad management a.k.a pizza-the-hut.

Eight year olds who still have a problem with self rationalizing dishonesty, like a prefrontal lobotomy—we don't need to see sight or hear one word from angling an arrogance to presume any worthiness or credibility for leadership in government. Let that sacred cow Mitt Romney return to his delightful flock, placate their ambivalence for civics ineptitude and tell them they're all going to heaven, even ALCOA and its bribe transferrer sweet talking James Baker to transferee Nielsen.

But in providing for the hoopla of the faith disclaimer, it sanitizes and self anoints just the same, it clears the air about who's superior before humbling oneself to be ready for an appallingly disdainful career choice pretending to work on behalf of the great unwashed. That's why liberals (just not liberally inclined to civil war) are so reprehensible, and they're going to take the blame for the trillion dollar decade of hogwild war profiteering because they'll try to raise taxes on their watch to pay for the republican's mess (Limbaugh). Liberal abuse of industrial waste takes many forms, fluoridation to high sulfur content gasoline market protection. The 'conservatives' (the old joke) conserve nothing, and want to waste everything. Same principle of reverse speech applies in them offering their 'faith' card, they're the churchy, fuzzy, feel good party—you need to know who your local moral virtue dealers are in the political debate, but they're sensitive to the minor flaws in the constitution which prohibit their bringing salvation, justice and making things neat. That's all that leadership is really about, blind... well and also retarded faith... obviously. Please observe the exit signs located in your web browser.

Take a gamble, they're going to keep trying to steal elections anyway, what would ever get in their way—the polling sheriffs of Munchkinland? Don't they have cute costumes, who are they kidding? Ogden Utah's last mayoral election actually was shell gaming the location of polling places, segregating 'provisional ballots' oh well, remind people of the importance to get out and vote. Maybe the ACLU of Utah will find a lesbian and have the results disqualified <rim shot, cymbal>. They are a card dealer too and have little regard for affirmative tests of greater complexities to the law wronged in the public's name or on their behalf. Card chasers in fact, just like the idea of an ambulance chaser: use a victim of conscience to void class representation for victims of the state's crimes, and provide an illusion of corruption's concessions to the isolated scrape blown out of all proportion.

What is Mitt Romney's faith (different sense of the word) in the electoral system, that is what a republic is by definition isn't it? Why doesn't he preach his belief in the system instead of changing the subject to the disallowed virtues he knows better through his religion than any others?

Democracy and human rights is an enemy to their demagoguery, they have always known this and they have misguided a bastardization of Christian doctrines so long as it grants exclusive status, or the antithesis of a representative electoral franchise. They could be more consistent elitist snobs if they stayed in their private business sector, but deceiving people and breaking the laws to raid the public trough is the most lucrative handiwork. They can pay for all the thugs they need, wink at each other and someone will take care of it.

Look at the front page of the New York Times, with Huckabee at the podium, Thursday, December 6th 2007, national edition, photo credit: Brandon Thibodeaux, Dallas Morning News. Notice the symbolisms of monarchy in the stained glass and the podium. The cross is converted for a sword, and the central focus is an enormous crown. Case closed, they're puppets of pure evil incarnate on earth. All they left out was the pirate flag, those symbols are not ones of theology, they are about brutality and domination, everything that motivated the origins of the United States of America to sue for a system of laws and diversified, equal and separate powers to interrupt the long since well established repeat historic inevitabilities of consolidated power's corruption.

And it is another strident hypocrisy they benefit from the protections of the American system under its constitution...which they always propound their contempt for in pedestrian stead next to their religious double-think...like they thrive in an isolated fool's paradise convenient for a daydream to suit their political chauvinism. It pales, how they safely subside every day all on their own in their imagination.

Now they have inherited a problem of deranging a misguided secession of lost generations of their ethnic basis clamoring after them as if they owed the fealty of unquestioning protégés; who in turn can read the writing on their corruption and have taken up clandestine, internecine violence, acts of terrorism and subterfuges of decoyed guerilla war in America. Weapon of choice: the mass shooting suicide dupe/patsy. Don't worry, the gun and pills will be provided if you don't have your own, maybe even someone who's used a gun before if you haven't, that you can swap in for—after they kill a dozen or at least try, and leave the weapon on your dead body, even write your suicide note maybe.

Or you write a suicide note but your solo journey and apologized ethics of not wanting to be a burden to others gets interrupted because you instantly become more valuable to a higher order predator. Second weapon of choice: blowing up buildings with people in them. Guardian ad litem? In loco parentis? Conferring power of attorney--do they train psychiatrists in these principles regulating their practice of medicine? Or are teenagers being abducted by Romney's political junta? Too many inconsistencies and circumstantial nexus, it doesn't just happen all the time at random. And there's not even a word of concern or moral guidance to young Americans from one of those political suits, or sitting officials, to turn them away from that, or is it a conflict over official capacities and faith that inhibits such intervention? He says it's time to talk about faith, but his Faith would eschew a regard for plurality—or something like that? Is Faith getting in the way of investigating VA Tech, or 9-11?

He should have the faith to tell his political party it is time for them to take their hands off the justice system and the authorities charged with peace and public safety, and to expect and welcome trenchant inquiry and unrelenting processing; to confess their sins and accept the fact they have been the bane responsible for half a century of American decline and world turmoil—in one guise, maneuver or other.

Intimidations are also good for stagnating the politically conscious freedom to choose. Americans are being threatened and bullied by sporadic episodes of staged, made for media atrocities. Then they are sold the idea of a noble tradition in the Yale Skull and Bones, the untouchable henchmen who are supposed to run everything through a system of intimidation, undermining this society—in film after film, and rumors of real life political figures.

Conventions have plied a tactic of overriding the laws that compel duties that are not at the behest or pleasure of any ‘executive officer’ or branch, which has led to the government being shut down or suspended with undeclared strikes in order to perpetrate fraud on every scale, by every means of criminality. Then the opportunists abroad get on board to help that blueprint along, the pseudo sophisticates who can convince the dwindling minority in fear of losing its power, that they know better how to run things—into the ground.

According to republican Congressional Representatives Jo Ann Davis and Heather Wilson it’s time to throw out the ratified body of laws and recruit more “shady characters (H.R. 861).” Because that’s more in the vogue of the lawless and how they prefer it, (creating another war and posturing as the valiant coercive strength bracing against terrorism... not their own terrorism... just to kick things off) is simply more impressive leadership, on the ball and what’s best. It’s ok if there is a means available to have someone else perform the terrorism for them, see, it’s not their fault, it’s not blood on the republican committee, organization, or ‘party’s’ hands.

“Nation building” is about propping up tyrants, having an international industrial banquet selling them the means to build the pretext for reducing their culture to rubble, disease and endless violence. There are no receipts, “they’re the terrorists, and they want to do that to Israel so it must be done to them first.”—pretext for toppling the U.S. and stealing elections is it also? Are there two enemies of monkey knows best? There are with those approval ratings, face up to that fact. Romney better have ‘faith’, but is it the faith that binds or the delusion that staves courage for remorseless and ultimately destructive zeal? A question needing meticulous attention, because there is no country for old deludenoids. Hey, what won’t they blow up next? And who’s going to sweep their little helpers out of the woods and off to deportation court or the penitentiaries? Who needs to clean out their desks to create jobs in the federal government? Critical questions.

Or is it the vexation of the vainglorious old defeated empire, to have their vicarious satisfactions restored through manipulation of the American war machine, to inflict their well advertised appetite for sadism? Is it just a racewar, or is it an excuse to sell oil to the last drop, till the surface of the earth is unlivable?

As long as there is money to be taken while ruining everything else for others, that is the only excuse required. Income is for gasoline, choke on your own fumes that's how it's going to be. It's not a free market, it's about industrial warfare that can get away with ditching the competition, the alternatives. Everything invested in your educational system, higher education, research and development, scholarships, programs to stimulate the health of science of engineering to find alternatives—well the republicans are going to let GM and big oil eat that too. It's all theirs to toy with, and to throw away. The RICO DAs on GM are all afraid of being fired.

They don't have an excuse to raise their heads in public, let alone belong on the political scene, republicans. They have idiots write to local papers (or plant fake letters), and I quote, "America is a republic, not a democracy!", like in reverse, a road is a form of travel, not a conveyance; or a business inventories, but it isn't in the business of inventorying? Is America a business that counts votes anymore, or lets the vote count?

...and plying a gratuitous 'faith' card, what is that supposed to be, another insult?

He can't discuss faith, Mr. Romney, because he is in denial. It's not the Hindus or the Muslims or Buddhists, or the Catholics he has to lower himself to communicate with or offer a pledge of equanimity. He's the one with the crisis of faith, him and his political junta are the problem, not the Constitution. He had better take the text of that document into his church testimony meeting some time and start reading it aloud before it is too late, would they be reverent? Aren't those, weren't those once people's beliefs, what they put their faith in? Isn't it 'cool' anymore?

Those framers had faith that puts Romney Inc. and cronies (with the little flag pins) in the dirt. They still had to push one of their own forward to go through the motions, mouth the words and put on appearances. That's all it really is. He is the equivalent of a disorienting fake pass to flood issue distortion with the mention of throwbacks who don't symbolize popular, inclusive values or unanimous representation. His campaign is a trick to ablate backlash for insurrection; and some power center in D.C. thinks it's always convenient to epitomize another group, a different group from their own. Let's talk about the 9-11 WTC sick day misprision fugitives. That's all neat and clean law talk, no one is being singled out because of their race, religion or sexual orientation in such a discussion are they?

Or is it time to call some other people a 'cult'? Are Mormons supposed to be the radicals at issue in America today?

And as an afterthought, since the internet is in nexus with so many of the freak atrocities supplying the news item shock value, is it possible a dupe or patsy target could be lured to a mass shooting location for the change out of identities? The message boards get so hostile, they vociferously defend the indefensible demolition of the WTC, little girls hang themselves and pregnant mothers fall into traps of fetus abduction.

The internet is very sophisticated, literally a hall of mirrors where no one knows who they're corresponding with through simple text messages. How would you like to be set up to meet a psychopathic killer before even the killer is made aware you exist? Matchmaking is done all the time over the internet with or without any of those parties awareness. Simplest applied weapon of domestic terrorism, effortless to coordinate any illusion or repeat sniper attacks. And they are not interested in killing themselves, they got it all mapped out, probably even end up rescued by the responding police and fire personnel. Is anyone taking their photographs and names, the people pulled out of these mass shooting incidents, checking identification? Everyone gets a good look as they're running and hiding for their lives. Convenient thing about the suicide part though...that completely wraps up the criminal investigation...the public is not included in an airing of the video tapes and presentation of the evidence of what exactly happened. No one is watching the cops, and everything is taken on faith the news is sufficient, fair and accurate coverage—proven so many times the opposite.

I'll bet that's why they have to keep the blinds closed over at Langley.

Did you know the government, of course the military and intelligence side of government, has had the most peculiar interest in twins research...supposed to be something to do with psychic abilities...right. Whatever they say through the tv dramas. You think that could be useful to the insurgent body-double atrocity Olympics in this country? How about Omaha this month, did they get two bomb threats phoned in prior there too? That's supposed to get all the law enforcement following the wrong leads and looking the wrong way, happened in Salt Lake City and Blacksburg.

And make sure to mislead the public, make a series of movies called The Bourne Identity, to convince everyone such a program is for foreign operations, and they're the good guys.

Habeas Corpa in the trial of Andrea Yates? Striking resemblances across age and height in her kids' group photograph. If you did breed a clone chain, it could suit such an assassin purpose. They've surely gone ahead and tried everything since a long ways back. Old habits die hard. Reminds me of that teleportation fantasy The Prestige and Einstein's paradox, with the sibling dying instead. "You don't want to figure it out.", how they make clones with electricity.

U.S. Atty. Todd Graves said Lisa M. Montgomery had been pregnant with her own child, but failed to detail why it "was never born"? Then she lied to her husband that she had given birth to the fetus she killed Bobby Jo Stinnet to steal.

Tell you what it looks like Todd, it looks like the setup didn't meet the drop the first time around. "You're fired."

And there is a rash of such heinous atrocity in America going back to 1987, seven cases including the above. Is illegal military/intelligence activity privatizing as it parasitizes America?

Some 'family values'...